CANTON, MISSISSIPPI, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1840.

Selected for the Madison Whig Advocate. I de not ask thy Love from fate. I de not sak thy love from fate, Though blessed those thou lovest are;

Thou art to me, beloved one, For which the dreaming spirit pineth, While far away its cold light shineth.

I do not ask to hear thy voice Fall gently on my listening ear; My fainting soul would melt and die

As if with fear, If then shouldst utter words to me Of m re than common courtesy.

Alas! my heart with stiffed sigh Met even that lip's most careless tone, And shrank beneath thy dark blue eye Like flowers at noon! How would it bear the burning words

Breathed forth in love's impassioned chords! But might I (as spirit haunts That milent spot it loves the best)

Meet the strange witchery of thy gaze, And watch thy rest, And treasure up each glance and word. Myself unseen-unknown-unheard.

Then would I wander by thy side In lonely love for evermore, And follow thee with gliding step From shore to shore; Nor breathe one selfish wish to be The cloud across thy memory.

But sometimes in thy dreaming ear, Through the long watches of the night, I'd rouse with some forgotten word Thy spirit's might; And then shouldst wake, and wonder why

My voice's tones seemed floating by. My voice's tones! oh! will one word Of all I uttered laughingly,

With lips that trembled while they smiled, Return to thee ! I do not ask thy love-and yet-

Would that thy heart could not forget! From the New York Herald.
